

COLOR OF EDUCATION

Yvette M. Richardson

Yvette Richardson is a Licensed Clinical Social Worker and Certified Resiliency Educator. She has several years of experience working with children, families, individuals and communities as an agent of support, guidance and change. She has a great passion to bring healing to people who have been through traumatic/stressful experiences. Yvette currently serves children and families as a school social worker. She works as a mental health practitioner with a focus on trauma informed care and has held adjunct teaching positions in social work at Barton College and East Carolina University.

Yvette is a lifelong learner inspired by the many opportunities to give back and pay it forward in order to enrich the lives of people. She is currently working on earning her national trauma certification. She is part of several school based teams that address the mental health, social emotional learning and resiliency of students. She has additional expertise in the areas of Crisis Intervention, Positive Parenting, and leadership.

Yvette earned a Bachelor of Social Work degree from Shaw University, and a Master of Social Work degree from East Carolina University. In her spare time Yvette enjoys her faith in God, family, friends, motorcycle riding and good food.
